

2008 NATIONAL CAMPUS SECURITY SUMMIT

Dear Colleagues

Campus security is becoming a topic of discussion around family dinner tables as the media reports unfortunate acts of violence and natural disasters. More than ever before, parents ask, “Will my son or daughter be safe on your campus?”

College and post-secondary administrators and our partners in law enforcement and counseling struggle to find the appropriate solutions for maintaining the safe and secure environment we have traditionally enjoyed, while providing a creative and open learning space.

This year’s Summit continues the dialogue started last May at the inaugural summit. The 2008 National Campus Security Summit will offer practical perspectives on issues pertinent to securing our country’s campuses, including crisis assessment, preparation and response, and the prevention and early intervention of behaviors and environmental factors that affect students, faculty, and staff in our campus communities.

Please join campus administrators, faculty, and staff; law enforcement leaders and agents; school and community counselors and psychologists; communications specialists; and student leaders as we explore the multifaceted and complex issues.

Sincerely,

W. Roger Webb, President
